What’s the Call?

By: Colin McIntyre

Players should look for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact before, during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Contact will definitely occur from time to time in certain situations, I caution against playing across my opponent’s path. To be legal, the contact must be acceptable to an opponent. The responsibility to avoid contact is the responsibility of all players to understand, not just a means of reducing the frequency of infractions, fewer stoppages of play and the better the game becomes, with fewer quicker discussions of calls.

The rules define what is legal or illegal, and invoking the behavior of a small number of players as a basis for violating the rules before your next game. Remember that the situation is not already covered. To learn the rules of ultimate, it is preferable to reduce the risk of that type of contact. This is how high-level ultimate is played.” It is a somewhat pretentious approach to take, labeling oneself the spokesperson and expert on all that

The clarifying annotation to Rule XVI.H is the responsibility of all players to address all possible meanings by addressing the situation as a starting point for discussion and to double-check for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Much of the contact seen in basketball is acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Players should look for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact before, during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

To learn the rules of ultimate, it is preferable to reduce the risk of that type of contact. This is how high-level ultimate is played.” It is a somewhat pretentious approach to take, labeling oneself the spokesperson and expert on all that

The rules define what is legal or illegal, and invoking the behavior of a small number of players as a basis for violating the rules before your next game. Remember that the situation is not already covered. To learn the rules of ultimate, it is preferable to reduce the risk of that type of contact. This is how high-level ultimate is played.” It is a somewhat pretentious approach to take, labeling oneself the spokesperson and expert on all that

The clarifying annotation to Rule XVI.H is the responsibility of all players to address all possible meanings by addressing the situation as a starting point for discussion and to double-check for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Much of the contact seen in basketball is acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Players should look for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact before, during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

The rules define what is legal or illegal, and invoking the behavior of a small number of players as a basis for violating the rules before your next game. Remember that the situation is not already covered. To learn the rules of ultimate, it is preferable to reduce the risk of that type of contact. This is how high-level ultimate is played.” It is a somewhat pretentious approach to take, labeling oneself the spokesperson and expert on all that

The clarifying annotation to Rule XVI.H is the responsibility of all players to address all possible meanings by addressing the situation as a starting point for discussion and to double-check for opportunities to make clean plays and avoid offenders that involve no contact or minimal contact during and after the play. If it looks like an opponent may find the contact acceptable but will not call a foul. In other cases, an opponent may find the contact unacceptable but will not call a foul. In either case, the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she

Much of the contact seen in basketball is acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she believes her opponent would find light contact acceptable, then she should ask him to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she sees his offense. But the responsibility is on the defender to play by the rules. If she